Immigration, Refugees and Citizenship Canada

Re: Passport Officer (PM-01), Passport Operations Division

Dear Hiring Manager,

I'm applying for the Passport Officer position with the Humanitarian Identity Operations Branch. I currently act at the PM-01 level as a Case Processing Agent in IRCC's Operations Support Centre in the National Capital Region, and my supervisor is aware of my interest in this role.

A large part of my daily work in GCMS is identity verification and data integrity, whether I'm resolving a duplicate UCI, an unlinked profile, or a biometric record applied to the wrong file.

Before I execute a merge, an association, or a disassociation, I work through every data point on the file. I check the biographic data (names with transliterations, dates and places of birth, parents, gender, nationality), the travel documents in the main documents tab (passport number, issuing country, dates of issue and expiry, prior passports on record), the biometric records under the criminality tab (10-print fingerprints, facial biometrics, match scores), the application history (prior applications, refusals, family and household linkages), and the supporting documents in the eDocs tab (national IDs, birth and marriage certificates). The data has to triangulate across all of these layers. If it does, the file represents a single identity and the action proceeds. If a name variant won't reconcile, a date of birth shifts between applications, a passport number appears on two profiles, or biometrics don't match the claimed identity, the discrepancy gets resolved before I move.

Passports themselves are often the anchor in that analysis. They carry biographic data, photographs over time, issuing-state details, and serial numbers that either confirm a single identity or expose a gap that needs to be explained. Reviewing passport applications, assessing supporting documentation, and making entitlement decisions in GCMS is the same analytical work applied to a different statute, the Canadian Passport Order rather than the Immigration and Refugee Protection Act. I apply IRPA and IRCC policy across the units I've worked in: BOSU on biometric collection and transmission, CISU on privacy breach investigations through UCI dataset analysis and anomaly flagging, and DI on identity record corrections including UCI merges and biometric associations and disassociations. The combination has put me in front of routine casework and breach review work alike, where decisions need to be careful, defensible, and consistent, and each one is documented in GCMS so the file stays audit-ready.

Collaboration with overseas missions is already part of my work. I provision and administer system access for staff at 60+ Visa Application Centres and Missions abroad, handling account requests, permission changes, and urgent issues across time zones. Working with Global Affairs Canada colleagues at missions, consulates, and high commissions on Canadian passport applications would be a natural extension of that.

I'm eligible for a Secret security clearance, ready to complete the Passport Operations Division training, and used to working both independently and as part of a team. I'd be glad to bring this experience to the Humanitarian Identity Operations Branch.

Thank you for your consideration.

Sincerely,

Husam Ahmed
