Re: Application for Officer, Supervision (Supervision Sector)

FINTRAC is the only place in Canada where compliance supervision and financial intelligence live under one roof, and the Supervision Sector is the part that meets reporting entities where compliance actually happens: programs examined on paper and in practice, findings documented, follow-through tracked. I want to do that work, and I am applying with an unusual but, I think, useful angle on it.

For three years at Rogers I was the person on the floor who would not let a transaction close until every KYC and documentation step was met, and who trained new hires to hold that same line. I know from the inside what a compliance program looks like when it is real, and what it looks like when it is paper: where front-line staff cut corners under volume, where documentation drifts from procedure, and what it takes operationally to keep the two aligned. When a Supervision officer examines a reporting entity's program, that is precisely the distinction being tested. At IRCC I now work the federal side of compliance, applying IRPA and controlled information-sharing protocols to breach handling at a national intake, where every decision is documented because it has to survive review.

The examination craft itself maps to work I already do. Assessing how an entity documents its obligations: in a concurrent research role I authored and maintained a consolidated SOP and compliance checklist as the team's primary reference, and kept a regulatory change log that flagged risks as rules evolved, so I know what good compliance documentation costs to build and maintain. Analyzing data and writing findings: I run Excel pivot analyses across large federal datasets to surface anomalies, and I built Power BI dashboards and wrote briefing notes for senior management. I am also completing the Google Data Analytics Professional Certificate.

Where I see myself helping the Supervision team: as obligations extend across more sectors, examination capacity is the constraint, and I work queues at national volume without losing documentation discipline. I would aim to become the officer whose examination files need no second pass: findings evidenced, rationale written, entity left knowing exactly what to fix.

I should be candid about the gap: I have not worked under the PCMLTFA directly. My regulatory frameworks have been IRPA, the Privacy Act, and federal and provincial drinking-water rules. What I can show is that I learn regulatory regimes quickly and in writing, well enough to author the reference documents other people work from. I hold an active Reliability Status with a clean history and am fully prepared for the Top Secret screening process. I am in Ottawa, bilingual English and Arabic with working French, with a BSc from the University of Ottawa.

Sincerely,
