Hiring Team, Analyst, Access to Information and Privacy (R4116)

Ottawa, ON

Re: Application for Analyst, Access to Information and Privacy (R4116)

Deciding what information can be disclosed, to whom, and under what authority is my current day job. At IRCC's Operations Support Centre I apply IRPA and the Privacy Act to controlled information-sharing decisions, handle flagged privacy breaches, and coordinate corrective action with internal teams and overseas missions. Each decision is documented so it can stand up to review later. That is the discipline ATIP work runs on, and it is why this role fits.

I should be candid that I have not processed formal ATIP requests. What I do daily is the program side of the same statute: severing what can be shared from what cannot, verifying records before release (I confirm citizenship status against naturalization and revocation records, citing supporting documentation for downstream officers), and managing a national intake queue against deadlines. The request-processing workflow and the case law around exemptions would be new; the judgment underneath them would not be.

Two things beyond the core. First, documentation: in a concurrent research role I author the team's consolidated SOP and compliance checklist and maintain a regulatory change log, so building and following audit-ready process is something I have done from both sides. Second, throughput with care: triaging a national intake of identity-correction requests means balancing urgency against capacity daily without letting accuracy slip.

I hold an active Reliability Status, I am in Ottawa, and I work in English and Arabic natively with working French. I would be glad to walk through any of this in a screen.

Sincerely,

Husam Ahmed
